although the crown of this tree looks messy, there is definite symmetry

And i would really like to get buttressing like this on one of my bonsai.

...a year! How did i manage it? I started the blog but never thought it would last, and to be honest most of the input is complete garbage but the occasional diamond post has made it all worth while.

...enough to have the wife to take wonderful pictures for me. I was just going to update on the flowerhorn-

Who is starting to colour up lovely, however as usual the wife managed to get an almost complete set from the main tank-

Still together!

She didn't however get a pic of the my new addition a tyretrack eel but that is to be expected as it spends most of it's time hiding under a rock. If you click on the tyretrack eel link you will get an in depth description of the eel from a fantastic site i have just found called Badmans Tropical Fish.

...worse than indecision. In this case it is to do with fish.

To keep or not to keep...

I really want to have a go at marine fish...

It's all about letting go!

...is spending the Easter holidays at Chez Charlton. He is a special bear who appears to have gone everywhere in his time with Abigails reception class. However here is a special one of him looking at the fish in the lobby of Chez Charlton-not the best pic i know, but he is always on the go and i only just managed to snap this on the phone.
